Read full review Read less Verified purchase Yes by esorensen28 June 08, 2016 The Iconic Film Camera This camera is what everyone thinks of when they hear film camera and rightfully so. Its a staple piece of equipment in Canons early days. Its reliable, beyond simple to operate and load film, and it has a really great light meter I havent needed to use an external meter. The program mode REALLY works. If you want to leisurely take photos, set it to program and let the camera select the best aperture and shutter speed it hasnt disappointed me yet., I also love how compact it is. This camera shines when using Portra 160, Portra 400 rated at 200, Kodak Ektar 100, Kodak Gold 200, and Cinestill 50D.. Read full review Read less Verified purchase Yes Show more Show less by reggiescabin September 30, 2009 Canon AE1 BUYER BEWARE. The kitchen table repair person has shot a squirt of things like WD40 into the mechanical parts via removing the lens mount cover. Some repair places do about the same thing., The problem is the grease is dry, the bearing squeaks when you click the shutter release because the mirror has to flip up to allow light to pass through the curtains to the film. Because its dry the mirror flipping is retarded in travel, many times not reaching the top to be out of the way of the curtains opening. Thus an exposure can and will be affected. Too many tried at home techniques involve these cameras so beware.either youll buy one of those or just one that effects exposures.why roll the dice with a camera that has a known issue or was tampered with. Consider yourself lucky to have found one done by a real pro repair person. Even at the time it was big, clunky, loud, rough and noisy. Youll hear tons of reviews that it takes great pictures. Well, not true. A camera body is just a light tight box. A LENS takes the picture and Canon brand lenses of the era ranged from good to excellent.

Back to the AE1 itself, they have a nasty habit of locking up for no apparent reason. Moving on, they do NOT have OTF Off The Film metering, consequently they were furnished with a ridiculous plastic slide that supposedly was to be kept on the flash shoe as a cover that was to be fitted over the viewfinder when taking pictures with your eye away from the viewfinder to avoid exposure errors. Its no surprise they are the ONLY company and ONLY camera to use Shutter Priority as the only available automatic exposure mode. Every other manufacturer uses Aperture Priority on their comparable cameras. The simple reason for this is Aperture Priority is more intuitive and arguably faster with the adjustment ring adjacent to the focus ring and falling naturally under your fingers. This will happen decades before such things as Pentax Spotmatics will give up the ghost.,, In summary, did they sell more units than the competition Absolutely. Their advertising was the best in print, TV and radio. Do they take good pictures. Yes, as good as the person behind the camera is capable of doing. Will one serve the purpose be it for nostalgia or photography class that mandates a camera that can be controlled manually Absolutely. Cameras are a tool, AE1s are just a relatively crude tool. There are better choices.. I was wondering if it would be possible to use 35mm film in a Zeiss. I have heard a lot of very good things about the camera, and I am fascinated by the history of the camera and how sheer mechanics and chemical reactions work together to formulate a sharp image on film. Since film is all very new to me, and very "permanent" as opposed to Digital, I want to be sure I am on the right track. Please tell me if I am on the right track, ESPECIALLY about the full manual mode. A blinking "1" on the light meter means "underexposed" and a blinking "32" means "overexposed. An aperture of "5.6" means an properly averaged shot, based on its center weighted metering, yet no matter what mode I select, it will always show the best aperture for proper exposure. FULL MANUAL Imagine I am pointing the camera at my computer screen. My main question is this Since it shows the preferred aperture, does that really mean the aperture it shows will be balanced. For instance, if it chooses an aperture of 2, will it be underexposed.
