It was designed to be manufactured with the extensive use of aluminum alloys and synthetic materials.

Introduced in 1964, Colt has made many different types of AR15 rifle and carbine models including the AR15, AR15A2, AR15A3, Sporter, HBAR, Government, Target, Match and many other models. In 1959, ArmaLite sold the design to Colt due to financial difficulties. After some modifications, the rifle eventually became the United States military M16 rifle. Shortly thereafter, Colt began to make semiautomatic versions for civilian sales. The term "AR15" is a Colt registered trademark, which they use to denote only the semiautomatic rifle versions available for civilian and law enforcement sales. This article discusses the semiautomatic version manufactured by Colt. These items range in date from the 1800s to the 1980s. May 2020 Learn how and when to remove this template message This example is fitted with an early wafflepatterned 20round magazine. The bolt carrier acts as a movable cylinder and the bolt itself acts as a stationary piston. The gas expands into the port and down a gas tube, located above the barrel that runs from the front sight base into the AR15s upper receiver. As the bolt carrier moves toward the butt of the gun, the bolt cam pin, riding in a slot on the bolt carrier, forces the bolt to rotate and thus unlocks it from the barrel extension. Once the bolt is fully unlocked it begins its rearward movement along with the bolt carrier. The bolts rearward motion extracts the empty cartridge case from the chamber. As soon as the neck of the case clears the barrel extension, the bolts springloaded ejector forces it out the ejection port in the side of the upper receiver. The buffer spring begins to push the bolt carrier and bolt back toward the chamber once it is compressed sufficiently.

A groove machined into the upper receiver guides the bolt cam pin and prevents it and the bolt from rotating into a closed position. The bolts locking lugs push a fresh round from the magazine as the bolt moves forward. The round is guided by feed ramps into the chamber. As the bolts locking lugs move past the barrel extension, the cam pin twists into a pocket milled into the upper receiver. AR15s employ a modular design. Thus one upper receiver can quickly and easily be substituted for another. Upper receivers are available with barrels of different weights, lengths, calibers, and rail systems with various sights and accessories. The lower receiver also contains the trigger, disconnect, hammer and fire selector collectively known as the fire control group. Full-sized rifles use a fixed buttstock, while carbines generally use an adjustable telescoping buttstock. The rear sight can be adjusted for windage. The sights can be adjusted with a bullet tip or pointed tool. The AR15 can also mount a scope on the carrying handle. Low capacity 5 or 10 round magazines are also available to comply with legal restrictions, for hunting, for benchrest shooting or where a larger magazine can be inconvenient. Military rifles were produced with firing modes, semiautomatic fire and either fully automatic fire mode or burst fire mode, in which the rifle fires three rounds in succession when the trigger is depressed. The semiautomatic bolt carrier has a longer lightening slot to prevent the bolts engagement with an automatic sear. Due to a decrease in mass the buffer spring is heavier. These configurations range from standard full-sized rifles with 20 inch barrels, to short carbine length models with 16 inch barrels, adjustable length stocks and optical sights, to long range target models with 24 inch barrels, bipods and high-powered scopes. These rifles may also have short stroke gas piston system, forgoing the direct gas system standard in AR15 rifles.

Sold as the AR15 Sporter Model SP1, it was nearly identical to the M16 with the exception of the fire control group. ISSN 03624331. Retrieved April 10, 2018. Krause Publications. p. 8. I tried looking up the info but I am not sure of the info I found. The instruction manual is dated 1979. The guy I bought it from thinks he bought it new around 1982. He said that he might have put 200 rounds through it which looks right. Inside is VERY clean. I have one mag and I couldnt find the same stamp on the internet. He said if he finds any more mags I can have them if I drive out there and pick them up. I have yet to fire it but I think its my new favorite. Anyway, check out the pics. They were taken with my camera phone so they are by no means high quality. Let me know if you all want any other shots. Thanks! Colt switched to two letter serial number prefixes in 1979. The last SP1 serial numbered gun was SP1 83400 made in 1978 The magazine is a commercial Colt mag supplied with the rifle. It was designed to use the the 55 grain M193 ammo. It will not handle the heavier.223 bullets now all the rage, and probably will not stabilize the longer 62 grain M855. rcmodelMine was made in 1968. Some day Ill get around to posting some pics.I brought it to the range today and didnt know what to expect but it was very accurate. I know people collect all guns but is this actually considered a collectors itemIf registering, leave this blank Neither The High Road nor any of its directors, members, managers, employees, agents, vendors, or suppliers will be liable for any direct, indirect, general, bodily injury, compensatory, special, punitive, consequential, or incidental damages including, without limitation, lost profits or revenues, costs of replacement goods, loss or damage to data arising out of the use or inability to use this forum or any services associated with this forum, or damages from the use of or reliance on the information present on this forum, even if you have been advised of the possibility of such damages.
